But AME Awards gives importance to the insights and the creativity of the ideas, which essentially delivers the results. And so, for me, this makes winning an AME Award more difficult as well as more rewarding. In addition, the AME Awards shows our Clients that creativity and effectiveness are not mutually exclusive. So, while their primary goal is results, this shows them that results can be achieved through insightful creativity.”

BlindMeters 289m

Using Google Maps to illustrate how many meters you miss when texting & driving.

Texting and driving is still a major cause of road deaths. Unfortunately, data shows that road safety campaigns no longer have the impact needed to change our behaviour.

Blindmeters.com is a radical different take. It is geo-located and turns Google Maps into a text editor, allowing you to type on any road. A custom-made font connects to the speed limitation data of the specific road you're typing on and stretches to the exact number of meters you miss when texting and driving.

To do so we programmed an algorithm that connects to different data-bases and layers them onto one website. One layer, Google Maps, is used as the primary visual data source. Another source allows us to use the geometry data of the roads. This, together with the speed limit data and other data and a custom-made font for the purpose to dynamically stretch, allows to type and render - stretch - texts on any road in the whole of Europe.

People engaged. Massively. Over 5 million blind meters were typed after just 24 hours. Literally the entire National and Regional press covered BlindMeters.com. In the next few months BlindMeters.com will also extend in other European countries.
